

HIGHER EDUCATION COST IS MOUNTING

Average Increase in Tuition at Twenty Institutions Is $25 a Year.

REASONS FOR ADVANCE

The cost of higher education is increasing. Almost every large university in America has increased its tuition charges within the last five years, and according to a survey made by the National Education Association, the average increase in tuition at twenty institutions is $25 a year.

The reasons set forth most frequently are that the cost of higher education must be made to keep up with the increased cost of living; that the wisdom of paying salaries more nearly equal to what the earning capacity of the professors would be in other lines of endeavor is becoming more apparent; that the best of students is but a beneficiary and it is only logical that he should bear a greater share of the burden.

It has been suggested further that in recent years endowments to established universities for general maintenance have been fewer and that it has not only been thought wise but it became absolutely necessary not to depend longer on such endowments to cover the increased cost of running the institutions. Those who have given money recently have preferred for the most part to give for specific purposes, such as buildings, which after all only add to the cost of maintaining the university.

The Harvard Corporation on April 26 last voted to increase the tuition from $100 to $125 for all students in Harvard College, the graduate school of arts and sciences, the graduate school of business administration, the school of law, the school of forestry, the school of engineering and the school of architecture and the Harvard-Yenching Institute with the school of forestry. This increase does not apply to the medical school. The increase is to become effective with the classes entering in September, 1915.

Changes at Yale.

The tuition for Harvard students taking courses in mechanical, electrical, civil and sanitary engineering, mining and metallurgy and research in the different branches of applied science, was increased from $150 to $250 when the Massachusetts Institute of Technology and Harvard agreed to cooperate early last year. This increase applies to all students entering these courses subsequent to the agreement.

Up to the college year 1913-14 the tuition in Yale College was $155 a year for three years and $165 for the senior year. In 1913-14 the senior year remained the same, but $18 instead of $19 was added for the senior year. Then for 1914-15 the tuition was raised to $200 a year, a charge was again made $10 additional.

In the Sheffield Scientific School at Yale the tuition was formerly $150 a year for three years and $165 for the senior year. In 1913-14 the senior year remained the same, but $18 instead of $19 was added for the senior year. Then for 1914-15 the tuition was raised to $200 a year, a charge was again made $10 additional.

At Princeton University, where there has been no tuition increase for five years, it has been announced that beginning with the class entering this fall the tuition will be increased $15 a year, a charge from $100 to $115.

Cornell University has increased her tuition fees in three departments, the increases going into effect this fall. The tuition in the college of arts and sciences, law and veterinary surgery was raised from $100 to $125. The tuition in the college of agriculture was raised from $100 to $125. The tuition in the college of engineering was raised from $100 to $125.

making better pay and in many instances they are getting it.

A few years ago figures compiled for the Carnegie Foundation showed that Columbia was spending $150 more on each student's education than the student paid into the treasury's office; Harvard was spending $150 more, Yale Princeton $85, Cornell $40, Johns Hopkins $124, Johns Stanford $210.

In making the increases most institutions have also made additional provision for students of limited means to obtain scholarships in order that the real increase may fall upon the students who can well afford to pay it.
